Tracy Rath with Frances Ward, O.C.'s Hair Police; Illustrated by Chloe Harder. Frustrated by the stigma of head lice, confused with the choice of denial by parents, desperate for schools to do more, irritated by the willingness of care givers to remain ignorant on the topic, and passionate to make a change, Tracy Rath with Frances Ward were inspired to create O.C.'s Hair Police. They are committed to educating the community on Lice Prevention & Removal, removing the physical nuisance while helping to reduce the stress and emotional anxiety that lice outbreaks create. For the past nine years, head lice played a significant role in Tracy's life. Her oldest daughter contracted it, spreading it to her other two kids. Her home had become off limits, a parasite infested island of despair, anxiety and chaos. Spending hours combing nits out of her children's hair helped them bond on a deeper level. Upon the next infestation six years later, the family met Frances Ward, Professional Lice Technician and Consultant (P-TLC). Out of adversity came O.C.'s Hair Police, committed to educating the community and the usage of safe, non-toxic products; ultimately leading to Louse Out: Every Kid's Self-Help Guide to the 11-Day Process of Getting Head Lice Out of Their Hair. O.C. Hair Police gives back a portion of their proceeds to the communities of families throughout Orange County.

Applaud the authors who use an opportunity to transform a child's negative self image caused by the stigma of head lice. It changes a damaging event into a teaching experience. Reading the steps will cure the lice and will initiate dialogue that opens children to a world of healthy self image and emotional balance. Take every occasion to help our kids from buying into the perfect body image trap. Liked the "fun facts" and quotes.
